RE: A Review of the Michigan lame-duck Bills (Nov. 18, 2018-Dec. 31, 2018)

Due primarily to the impact of Michigan's state office term limits law, there was a significant turnover of lawmakers in both the Michigan State House and Senate.¹ This year, during the State Legislature's lame-duck session,² the State House and Senate submitted approximately 340 bills for the Governor to consider, of those bills, the Governor vetoed 55 bills.³ It appears the term limits law has influenced the legislature to promote bills which disproportionately support the concerns of special interest, while railing against causes which would help the less fortunate of Michigan, such as curtailing the recent voter approved referendum on minimum wage increases, under Senate Bill 1171, which is detailed in this report.⁴ We have attached a complete list of the lame duck legislation and actions for Council's edification.

<https://www.detroitnews.com/story/news/local/michigan/2018/11/25/term-limits-michigan-largest-legislative-turnover-country/2017865002/>

² When an elected official loses an election (or retires from office), that official is called a lame duck for the remainder of his or her term. When a legislature assembles between election day and the day that new legislators assume office, the meeting is called a lame-duck session. In Michigan, term limits also have an impact.

³ Michigan lame-duck bills: Here's what Gov. Snyder has signed, vetoed <https://www.clickondetroit.com/michigan-politics/michigan-lame-duck-bills-heres-what-gov-snyder-has-signed-vetoed>

⁴ Legislative term limits in Michigan have failed to achieve their proponents' stated goals: Ridding government of career politicians, increasing diversity among elected officials, and making elections more competitive. Term limits have failed to strengthen ties between legislators and their districts or sever cozy relationships with lobbyists. They have weakened the legislature in its relationship with the executive
